

Comments
Globe Live. All New. All True. All Live.

Baker administration accused of denying shelter to homeless mothers

131

PAT GREENHOUSE/GLOBE STAFF

Massachusetts Governor Charlie Baker.

By Joshua Miller | GLOBE STAFF DECEMBER 15, 2016

Governor Charlie Baker's longstanding push to end the practice of putting homeless families

Twitter Share 131

Commonwealth's most vulnerable, a lawsuit from five mothers struggling with homelessness alleges.

Comments

Homeless parents and children who are legally entitled to immediate accommodations are turned away because shelters are full and the state has stopped using motels as housing of last resort, the lawsuit says. As a result, the suit says, children end up sleeping in places not meant for human habitation, such as emergency rooms.

Implicit in the legal action is a more pernicious allegation, one the administration strongly denies: That in service to a pledge made during Baker's political campaign, the state is hurting residents who most need help.

"By not immediately placing families who are eligible or who appear to be eligible," the suit alleges, the state "is seeking unlawfully to reduce the demand for shelter placements, which in turn enables the agency to assert that there is no longer a need for motel placements."

Get Fast Forward in your inbox:

Forget yesterday's news. Get what you need today in this early-morning email.

Sign Up

The Baker administration rejected the premise of the lawsuit and strongly defended its record.

Comments

Read the lawsuit against the Baker administration over its homeless policy

The suit says kids end up sleeping in places not meant for human habitation, such as emergency rooms.

“The administration is proud of its record rehousing and resheltering thousands of homeless children, reducing the number of families sheltered in motel rooms from 1,500 to under 160,” Paul McMorrow, a spokesman for the Department of Housing and Community Development, said Thursday.

“Massachusetts is the only state in the nation that offers homeless children a right to shelter, and DHCD has consistently upheld that right, and acted in compliance with the law, while substantially reducing the state’s reliance on motel shelters,” he said in an e-mail.

Massachusetts is the country’s sole right-to-shelter state. That means when eligible families — those whose incomes are close to or below the federal poverty level — can show they are homeless because of domestic violence, natural disaster, no-fault eviction, or substantial health and safety risks, the state is mandated to provide housing. That can take the form of a room in a shelter or, if there aren’t any left, a hotel or motel.

During his 2014 campaign for governor, Baker decried the use of such accommodations as a “human tragedy,” and said he would work to end the practice. Visiting homeless people on Christmas Eve that year with Cardinal Sean P. O’Malley, the Republican promised to get the number of families in hotels and motels “down to zero before the end of our four years.”

Advocates for the homeless, policy makers of both parties, and the Baker administration broadly concur that hotels and motels are often a dreadfully inadequate option for housing families. That type of lodging frequently separates them from the social support of relatives and friends, familiar schools, a clean place for children to play, easy access to public transportation, and kitchen equipment such as a refrigerator and stove.

But some advocates say the administration has been too aggressive in reducing motel use.

“Everybody agrees that it would be good to ensure that homeless families are in better placements than motels. But what’s happening is that they end up in places that are worse — not in shelter at all, or in far-flung places where their lives are further disrupted,” said Ruth A. Bourquin, one of the Greater Boston Legal Services lawyers who filed the suit.

“It’s just getting to a real crisis point,” she said.

Asked if state data could back up that claim, Bourquin said numbers would not capture the limbo into which the administration is putting families — neither approving nor denying their applications, but making them wait for days or weeks while they struggle to find a safe place to sleep.

As of Wednesday night, 157 homeless families were in motels and hotels, and 3,468 homeless families were in shelters at state expense, according to data from the state housing office. When Baker took office in January 2015, there were 1,500 families in motels and hotels.

Sept. 21 was the last time a family was placed by the state in a motel, the data show.

Philip Mangano, a longtime advocate for the homeless who worked for the administrations of George W. Bush and President Obama, lauded the Baker administration.

He said Baker’s “reducing the number of families in the inhumane conditions that are often found in welfare hotels — that’s a worthy effort that they’ve made in just two years.”

Mangano cautioned, “If in the zeal to reduce the numbers, they’ve postponed access a bit,

But he said sometimes in postponing placing a family in a motel, families find a better place to stay. “And the difficulty with those welfare hotels, they isolate the mom and the children from schools and social connectedness. And when you’re isolated in that way, your length of time in homelessness is likely to increase — all the data shows that.”

Kelly Turley of the Massachusetts Coalition for the Homeless, said the families who brought the suit represent “a larger cohort of families across the Commonwealth that are struggling to survive in the current housing market, and have no safe place to go with their children.”

She said her group hopes the suit can be settled quickly “in a way that demonstrates greater responsiveness to the critical and intertwined housing, medical, education, and support needs of families who are experiencing homelessness.”

Over the past two years, Baker administration officials have repeatedly said they are trying to improve the system so more families get help before they become homeless. And the administration has ramped up a program that provides up to $8,000 to help pay for rent, utilities, and other expenses so families can stay in their homes, or defray the costs of staying with a friend or relative. (That program is just for families who are eligible for emergency housing.)

The administration has also increased funding for a rental voucher program.

But the lawsuit paints a darker picture of a less caring government and seeks to compel action with individual stories.

Rosanna Garcia, a homeless mother, is one of the plaintiffs. She applied for emergency shelter on Dec. 6 and presented documentation of her eligibility, but was not given a place for her family to stay, the lawsuit says. Instead, the state contacted Garcia’s mother, who lives in public housing, and convinced her to take in her daughter and daughter’s children, even though doing so put her tenancy at risk. Further, the suit alleges Garcia and her children had to sleep on the floor.

The Suffolk Superior Court suit, filed by Greater Boston Legal Services, seeks to be certified for it.

Comments

It also contends that when the administration does provide shelter for families, the housing sometimes does not meet legal standards for being close to their hometowns and schools, or accommodating their disabilities.

Joshua Miller can be reached at joshua.miller@globe.com.

SHOW 131 COMMENTS

Most Popular In Metro

Power outages reach 2,500 as powerful weather system crosses Massachusetts

A powerful weather system prompted the National Weather Service to issue a flash flood watch for six counties in Mass. MORE...

All aboard the Red Line. May God have mercy on your souls

Welcome back to the work week. We're experiencing moderate delays. MORE...

Hurricane Irma has entered a class all its own

Think of the worst thunderstorm you've ever experienced, and now imagine that type of storm with 185 mile-per-hour winds. MORE...

A tale of two cities, and both of them are Lowell

The former mill town is at a crossroads, with disagreement about what its future should hold. MORE...

Twitter Share 131

Comments

Widow of Sweet Tomatoes crash victim: 'Joy has been taken from our lives.'

The woman, working at the restaurant, said her life changed forever when an SUV crashed through the wall, injuring her and killing two last September. MORE...

What can we expect with Hurricane Irma?

Make no mistake: The threat of this storm is real. However, there are still many unknowns. MORE...

Global warming to make powerful hurricanes more likely

Warming oceans are likely to make powerful storms increasingly common in the coming decades, scientists say. MORE...

Is Hillary Clinton's book coming out at the worst possible time?

Democrats in Washington have proven themselves fairly unified in recent months. But the revelations in Clinton's book may undermine all that. MORE...

Another Red Line signal problem irks commuters

The problems caused chaos for Red Line commuters during the morning rush hour for the second straight day. MORE...

MBTA says changes are coming after its signal system again strands riders

The T plans to spend $352 million to improve the signal systems on the Red and Orange lines before new subway cars for each line arrive by 2023. MORE...

Nathaniel Kibby wanted to testify before taking plea deal in kidnapping, torture case

Nathaniel Kibby said he wanted to testify truthfully in the shocking case, but two weeks later he took a plea deal and was sentenced to 45 to 90 years. MORE...

Twee Share

131

BC grad breaks Appalachian Trail record with final push of 37 sleepless hours

Joe McConaughy completed the 2,190-mile trail in 45 days, 12 hours, 15 minutes. That's an average of about 48 miles a day. MORE...

MIT fraternity cited after Labor Day weekend party

Police found underage drinking, overcrowding, and a waterfall pouring down a flight of stairs at an MIT party over the weekend. MORE...

Video captures head-on Cohasset crash caused by allegedly drunk driver

"It's a miracle nobody was killed in this crash," police said. MORE...

When do you pay $13.45 for a $7.66 McDonald's meal? When you're a millennial.

Millennials are spending big to have burgers, sushi, rice bowls, etc. delivered. Cooking? Who can be bothered? MORE...

Most Boston charter schools reject performance-based pay for teachers

Most of the schools now use traditional pay scales, according to University of Washington research. MORE...

Mobster suspected in Isabella Gardner Museum case may not be mentally competent

Federal authorities believe Robert Gentile, 81, knows where the stolen paintings can be found. MORE...

How worried should New England be about Hurricane Irma?

As of Friday morning, Irma is a Category 2 hurricane. MORE...

‘It is a heartwarming day, unquestionably.’

Tweet Share 131

More than 200 people rallied near Boston's Faneuil Hall Tuesday night in opposition to President Trump's decision to end a program that assists young, undocumented immigrants. MORE...

Comments

Top 10 Trending Articles

Most Viewed

Most Commented

Most Shared

'Potentially catastrophic' Hurricane Irma makes landfall in Caribbean islands

Downpours with up to 2 inches of rain per hour possible today

All aboard the Red Line. May God have mercy on your souls

New stepmother feels attention deficit

Hurricane Irma has entered a class all its own

Lowell at a crossroads

Alex Speier: Everything you need to know about sign-stealing

Dentists to poor people: Drop dead

New York tabloids have a field day with Red Sox' sign-stealing case

8 things you need to know about Hurricane Irma

My Account

Manage my Account

Mobile Customer Service

Sign Up For Newsletters

Contact

Help

FAQs

Globe newsroom

Advertise

Social

Twitter Share

131

More

Facebook

Comments

ePaper

Twitter

News in Education

Google+

Archives

Privacy policy

Terms of service

Terms of purchase

Work at Boston Globe Media

© 2017 Boston Globe Media Partners, LLC